

Comprehensive Research Report: Lonny Bramzon

Lonny Bramzon is a prominent criminal defense attorney and cannabis advocate who has built a unique professional identity as "Lonny the Street Lawyer," combining prestigious legal education with street-level credibility and innovative marketing approaches. (iHeart) (DC101) Since opening his private practice in 2006, he has represented over 5,000 criminal defendants (iHeart) while maintaining recognition as a Super Lawyers selection for four consecutive years (2019-2022). (Super Lawyers)

Educational background and academic achievements

Bramzon's educational trajectory demonstrates exceptional academic acceleration paired with later academic challenges. He completed his Bachelor's degree in Comparative and Political Sociology at Stanford University in just three years (Streetlawyerservicescbd +2) around 2000, entering Columbia Law School at age 21. (Justia +3) However, his law school experience proved more challenging - he graduated from Columbia University School of Law in 2003 (District Fray) (some sources indicate 2005, though 2003 appears more reliable) and has openly acknowledged finishing in the bottom third of his class, which prevented him from receiving offers from major law firms. (District Fray)

His academic credentials are verified across multiple sources, though no specific academic honors, law review participation, or published academic work from his time at either institution were found. His brother Daniel Bramzon followed a similar educational path, graduating from Stanford (District Fray) with a B.A. in History (1994-1997) and the University of Chicago Law School (1997-2000), suggesting a family emphasis on elite education. ## Professional legal career and expertise

Bramzon's legal career began with a six-month intensive internship under Samuel Delgado, a criminal defense attorney with over 40 years of experience who had handled more than 200 homicide cases. (District Fray) This mentorship proved crucial, as Bramzon's fluency in Spanish made him valuable for MS-13 cases requiring interpreter services, giving him hands-on experience with crime scene investigation and complex criminal procedures. (District Fray)

He served as Assistant Public Defender in Baltimore from approximately 2004-2006, representing up to 30 clients daily (Cornell Law School) (Justia) in conditions he describes as working in "Vietnam" - a reference to the challenging environment of Baltimore City Jail. (Cornell Law School +3) This experience handling violent crimes, including multiple murder cases, provided the foundation for his later private practice specialization.

Research limitations and source reliability

This research draws from multiple verified sources including legal directories (Martindale-Hubbell, Avvo, Super Lawyers), professional publications (District Fray, Washington Jewish Week), and social media profiles. Some minor discrepancies exist, particularly regarding Columbia Law School graduation date (2003 vs. 2005), though 2003 appears more reliable based on source quality. No evidence of academic honors or published academic work during his education was found, and specific case details are limited due to attorney-client privilege constraints.

The information presented here represents publicly available material and should be considered accurate based on current sources, though some promotional language in biographical materials should be evaluated as marketing content rather than objective assessment.
